The president is looking into the legalities and ethics of whether Trump could order U.S. military action against the Syrian leader's son, the president's former chief strategist Steve Bannon told the New York Times. Bannon said the White House staff has discussed how to respond if the Assad regime uses chemical weapons against civilians. Trump has long been skeptical of military intervention in the region, and said during his campaign that he would be reluctant to risk sending troops to intervene in the war-torn nation, where more than 1 million people have been killed.
