LiteLockr [Win/Mac] (Updated 2022)

Smart and easy to use parental control application locks or unlocks all devices in Windows. It lets you lock or unlock only specific apps on a device, lock only input devices or lock all apps. How to use: Use the "Lock" button to lock the device, use the "Unlock" button to unlock it. Use the "Lock List" button to lock specific apps, use the "Unlock List" button to unlock it. Use the "Lock All" button to lock all input devices, use the "Unlock All" button to unlock it. The LiteLockr app is a parental control tool designed to help you lock or unlock a computer in a quick and easy way. It does exactly as described above, but that's where the similarity ends. According to the program's website, LiteLockr is a free software that "locks or unlocks all devices in Windows." However, it's often worth noting that if you're looking for an app that will "lock" or "unlock" input devices for a specific software, you'll be better off looking for a specialized app. Overall, the LiteLockr program allows you to lock or unlock all the input devices (mouse, keyboard, touch screen,...) and also to select specific apps from a list to remain unlocked while others are locked. The majority of the time, this feature will be what you need, but there are a few instances where it's not. For instance, if your child is 5 or 6 years old and knows how to disable the app and set up the keyboard shortcuts used to unlock the applications, then you may not need the program in question. Some of the better alternatives are listed below, but our recommendation is to keep things simple and stick to the bare-bones version of this parental control app that will get the job done. When installing the application, it will ask you if it should be used automatically as the default lock/unlock options or if you want to show a simple menu with preset choices. If you choose the former, then the program will be automatically invoked, but if you want to be able to choose things like "Lock YouTube" or "Don't unlock certain apps," then you should choose the latter. The app is designed to be easy to use, and this can be seen from the first moments of use. Like most parental control tools, it will ask you to specify the input devices you want to be unlocked or locked

I guess the questions is how long do you want to use the device before it locks? That's the real question, is it already locked when you use it as a tablet? Not sure what the point in the article is. A child watching a video on YouTube is not going to cause any harm, they are toddlers so they aren't going to be able to harm themselves, more likely they would damage a tablet if they fell over and fell off. So for all intensive purposes they are fine, the article does not say the child will harm themselves, but just maybe damage a tablet. The article says it's meant for kids, if I am the parent of a kid that is prone to do harm to themselves they won't be watching videos, they will be playing on games that are potentially more dangerous. So if the article says that it's for kids then let it be for kids, I would not want my kids to be watching YouTube while playing Farmville, that would be more harmful to them then watching a couple of videos. Yeah - if this is supposed to be for Kids, then the description should say that - "The article says that the app blocks all input devices" - unless you are not a parent, or a child? - In which case the description should say "all input devices, except keyboard and mouse." I don't see the point in the article. The article essentially says "Use this app, to help kids, and help me, to get back to
