>1984 Iranian legislative election A parliamentary election were held in Iran on 21 August 1984. Voters elected 295 members of Assembly of Experts and 70 members to the 39th Majlis of Iran, the first in which women had the right to vote. Background Supreme Leader Ruhollah Khomeini began supporting the election of women for the Assembly of Experts (Shura-ye Khoureb) as early as January 1983. Due to the rapid increase in women's activism after the revolution, female activists sought to become candidates in the upcoming elections. The elections went through a variety of twists and turns. Khomeini first refused to allow women to vote in Assembly of Experts elections due to concerns over political divergences, then attempted to establish the Grand Ayatollah Rouhollah Zakka to counter the influence of the women's movement with women's votes and its mobilized base. The women's movement was also worried of possible Tehran victory, which could undermine women's programs. The Committee for the Defence of Women's Rights campaigned against the election of Khomeini's candidate. Campaign The first major female electoral campaign of the revolution was called the "Women's Elections Campaign Committee" and was made up of 448 female activists. The campaign conducted this "Women's Campaign" in late 1983. Ultimately, the campaign pressured the Supreme Leader to support the women's candidacy and Khomeini

Auto Kitchen is an easy-to-use utility with two main functions. First, you can scan your computer for detailed registry problems and remove them automatically. Second, it will help to optimize Windows by removing any unnecessary system programs and improving each speed.

Among the tools that Auto Kitchen has are a system scanner, Win32 file recovery, automates start-up, defragmenting, and system cleaning. Auto Kitchen even tells you when it finds problems and gives you the opportunity to remove them automatically.

You don't have to manually download and install the program; Auto Kitchen will offer it to you after it scans your computer. When you run Auto Kitchen, you may see errors and follow them to the next page, where you may click "Fix Now" or "Fix Later". Once you click on "Fix Now", you will have to manually download and install the update file.

In order to begin the initial scan, a pop-up will appear on the top-left of your screen. The pop-up will request whether you want to start the scan automatically or manually. Once you click "OK", the scan will begin. During the scan, Auto Kitchen may take some time to run and display the brief result or error in a pop-up.

Auto Kitchen will continue to run until you manually click "Finish Scan". If you choose to manually click "Finish Scan", you can start the maintenance process by clicking "Quit" within the "Automatic Maintenance" section. The maintenance process will begin without any further interaction. Once the maintenance process has completed, you are returned to the main screen to view your Scan
