Saved the day – How Spectrasonics Stylus Rmx 15 Keygen Download 205 Product KeyExercise is the best treatment for obesity and now comes the news that it is also good for depression. As Dan Wootton, head of the Stress and Anxiety Department at King's College London, told the New Scientist: "If you're feeling stressed, you might exercise to lift your mood." The evidence, he says, is undeniable. In studies, subjects given drugs to increase the levels of brain chemicals thought to be involved in happiness (serotonin, noradrenaline and dopamine) report feeling happier. But in studies of people on antidepressants, exercise increases these brain chemicals too. This is better known as the "endorphin boost". Have a look at these accounts of two of the most popular recreational activities. "I wake up and I'm 40 kg overweight," says Denise, who lives in Los Angeles. "I thought, I'm going to join a gym and lose weight. I got a membership and started going three times a week. I started with running on the treadmill, then bought more machines. Then I had friends that were doing this fitness thing, and I joined a small group." Anne has a different story to tell. She does not feel at all stressed, never drinks alcohol and sleeps well. "I don't diet or count calories because I'm naturally slender and have the right metabolism. Exercise makes me feel calmer," she says. "Although I do yoga, my favourite is walking." In other words, there is a simple connection between being physically active and a good mood. So why should the news that exercise is good for depression have got people excited? Well, there are two sides
